A Word from our President

Hello,

It's been a hot dry and busy Summer here. The harvest season has begun and looks to be a very busy Fall season.

Everyone in attendance enjoyed a fun day of golf and good food at our first annual golf outing. Of course any day of golf is better than a day at work.

We are seeking a new Vice President so if you want to get more involved in LICA here is your chance.

Have a safe and profitable Fall and stay safe.

Chloe is currently a Freshman attending Purdue University majoring in Ag Business, and hopes to graduate in only 3 years. Following graduation, Chloe plans to return to the family business and eventually take it over. Chloe chose her degree to not only teach her more about farm drainage, but to also allow her to help improve the land around her for years to come. CONGRATULATIONS CHLOE!

September Board Meeting and Membership Event

The INLICA board met on September 10th at the Punch Bowl Social in Indianapolis. We had been hoping for a larger crowd, but still had a great time socializing with those members that did attend. Prior to lunch and games, the board convened and discussed our upcoming convention that will be held January 26th-28th at the Indianapolis Marriott North. Mark your calendars and plan to attend! We have condensed down the schedule and will be holding the awards banquet and entertainment on Friday evening to accommodate for more wives to be able to attend. Among other items on our agenda, a discussion was held regarding publishing attendance in future newsletters (to follow suit with other LICA chapters). Published attendance of board meetings will begin in 2023.

General Liability Exposures Every Organization Should Know...

Almost every organization faces commercial liability exposures. A commercial liability loss exposure is a condition or situation that presents the possibility of an organization becoming legally and financially responsible for injury, harm or damage to another party.

These exposures stem from the kind of work an organization performs and where that work is executed. They also encompass other aspects of business-related circumstances, activities or events that could result in harm to a third party.

Read this article to better understand the most common types of commercial liability loss exposures and potential consequences and for guidance on how the correct insurance policy can reduce the risk to organizations.

Common Types of Commercial Liability Exposure to Know

There are five types of commercial liability exposure that every organization should know. Possible loss exposures that may affect an organization include the following:

Premises liability—Premises liability describes the risk an organization faces if a customer or client is injured on the premises (e.g., tripping and hurting themselves at the store). Organizations that require customers or clients to be physically present, such as retail stores and landlords, are particularly at risk for these losses and may be held liable for bodily injury or property damage.

Operational liability—Operations liability exposure refers to the possibility that an organization will be held liable because of bodily injury or property damage that occurs as a result of their ongoing (as opposed to completed) operations. For example, imagine a contractor working on a client's home. During the course of their work, an employee from the contractor drops a tool, striking a passerby and causing bodily injury and property damage to the home itself.

Products liability—Products liability refers to the loss exposure an organization faces as a result of manufacturing, distributing or selling an unsafe or defective product. Any organization that makes or sells products is at risk. Associated injuries may occur virtually anywhere in the world once an organization's products have been manufactured or sold.

Completed operations liability—The completed operations liability exposure refers to injuries or damages incurred by a third party due to work (including construction work) that has been finished, turned over to the purchaser or client, and/or put to its intended use. For example, an electrical fire caused by faulty wiring at a completed construction project would represent a completed operations exposure for the contractor who completed the work. It should be noted that injuries or damages arising out of completed operations can occur after a business's relationship with the injured party has ended.

Contractual Liability—Organizations take on contractual liability loss exposures when they enter into a contract. By agreeing to contractual terms, an organization becomes liable if the other parties involved in the contract believe an organization has not fulfilled its obligations under the agreement.

Potential Consequences of Liability Exposures

In the event of a commercial liability loss, organizations can face a variety of potential consequences, such as:

Damages—If a court deems an organization responsible for a loss, that organization may be held financially accountable for paying damages to the harmed or injured party.

Defense costs—The organization may have to pay legal defense costs and the costs associated with the claim.

Reputational harm—Due to general liability losses, organizations may experience reputational harm, including but not limited to the loss of business, decreased employee retention, and a loss of consumer loyalty and investor trust.

Although commercial liability loss exposures are a risk for every organization, the severity of the consequences can be alleviated with proper insurance policies.

Commercial Liability Insurance

No matter how careful an organization is, there will always be risks associated with commercial liability loss exposures. Therefore, the best way to protect an organization is to purchase commercial general liability coverage (CGL).

CGL policies are designed to cover an organization from liability claims for bodily injury and property damage to third parties. CGL policies have three standard coverages:

Bodily injury and property damage—This coverage protects organizations from the legal liability arising from bodily injury and property damage stemming from an organization’s premises or operations.

Personal and advertising injury—This aspect of CGL policies protects insureds from liability stemming from accusations of libel, slander, false arrest, copyright infringement, malicious prosecution, theft of advertising ideas and invasion of privacy.

Medical payments—Medical payments coverage includes payments for injuries sustained by third parties that are caused by an accident at the insured’s premises or the insured’s operations. Unlike bodily injury and property damage coverage, medical payments coverage can be triggered without legal action and is designed to settle smaller, less serious medical claims without litigation.

Conclusion

Consult a trusted insurance professional for further guidance on how to protect your organization from commercial liability loss exposures.
